

World Heritage and U. S. Civil Rights Sites Symposium

April 20-22, 2017 - Atlanta, Georgia

A gathering of scholars, historic preservationists, property owners and stakeholders to discuss a World Heritage serial nomination for historic sites associated with the U. S. Civil Rights Movement.

The Georgia State University World Heritage Initiative has embarked on an effort to nominate a group of U. S. Civil Rights Sites to the World Heritage List, thereby achieving for these historic places associated with the modern struggle for race reform in America the highest possible level of global recognition possible.

Owners of historic properties associated with the civil rights struggle of the 1950s and 1960s, movement scholars and historic preservationists will gather in Atlanta, April 20-22, 2017, at the World Heritage and U. S. Civil Rights Sites Symposium to discuss preparing a Serial Nomination for the National Park Service to propose to UNESCO's World Heritage Committee.

Free and open to the public, the Atlanta Symposium will feature sessions explaining the objectives of the Initiative, the World Heritage nomination process, and what might be expected for property owners and relevant stakeholders of historic sites if they received such a designation.
